ST. JOHN'S UNITED METHODIST CHURCH

1889

1205 N. Main Street
Hampstead

private

The St. John's United Methodist Church began as a Methodist Episcopal congregation. The first building was a log structure that served as a church and school for the Hampstead community. It was built by Rev. Amon Richards, a local preacher and surveyor, on a "Meeting House Lott or School Lott" laid out by Joshua Tipton. The building was known in 1809 as Richard Richard's schoolhouse. During the early 1840s, the Methodist congregation in Hampstead became better organized. In 1846, the present church lot and cemetery were donated and a stone church was built by contractor Richard Richards.

The present brick church building of St. John's United Methodist Church was built in 1889 in a rural Gothic Revival style. It is a two-story, three-bay by five-bay brick structure in stretcher bond. It has an imposing tall, narrow brick tower presenting a strong sense of vertical movement to the main facade. The centrally located tower contains the major ornamentation of the structure including the bell tower with an unusual sloped roof covered in patterned shingles. Adding to the ornamentation of the structure are the corner pilasters, brickwork brackets and molded brick lintels over the windows and main entrance.

Summary: The St. John's United Methodist Church was built in 1889 in a rural Gothic Revival style. It is a two-story, three-bay by five-bay brick structure in stretcher bond. It has an imposing tall, narrow brick tower presenting a strong sense of vertical movement to the main facade. The centrally located tower contains the major ornamentation of the structure including the bell tower with an unusual sloped roof covered in patterned shingles. Adding to the ornamentation of the structure are the corner pilasters, brickwork brackets and molded brick lintels over the windows and main entrance.

Description: The St. John's United Methodist Church is located on the southeast corner of Hanover Pike (Md. Rt. 30) and Md. Rt. 833. The structure is sited close to the road and it has an imposing tall, narrow brick tower presenting a strong sense of vertical movement to the main facade. An early postcard of the structure, however, shows that with the early dirt road, the site was tree-lined and set back which conveyed less of a stark contrast to the building than exists today.

Early photographs also show that the exterior of the church was originally left unpainted, but was painted in the early 20th century. Church records show that it was painted gray in 1913. Later, the color was changed to white. Unfortunately, the church was sandblasted in the 1970s, leaving it today with a rough surface and orange-cast appearance.

The building presents a rural example of the Gothic Revival style. It is a two-story, three-bay by five-bay brick structure in stretcher bond. Emphasis is placed on the central tower with its central pointed-arch entrance, double pointed-arch windows, circular window, bell tower with four corner finials, and unusual sloped roof with a patterned shingle design. The main facade has a gable front, corner pilasters, and a brick bracket cornice. The windows and doors throughout the structure have projecting brick pointed-arch lintels.

History: Hampstead was founded in 1786 and became a small commercial center that supported the farms of the surrounding area. On a parcel of "Spring Garden" laid out by Joshua Tipton (apparently an early addition to Christopher Vaughan's Hampstead), a "Meeting House Lott or School Lott" was laid out. Local histories state that the Rev. Amon Richards, a preacher and surveyor, built a log structure on this lot in 1800. In 1809, it was known as Richard Richard's School House.

In the early 1840s, the Methodist congregation in Hampstead became better organized and by 1846, a new church and cemetery lot was acquired. The first church at this current location was a stone structure, built in 1845 with Richard Richards as contractor.

In 1889, the present brick church was built. It is an imposing brick structure in a rural Gothic Revival style.
